Paul, William Morris, North York, Ont.; University of Toronto, 1947, obstetrics and gynecology. Died Nov. 19, 2006, aged 82. "During his career he headed the Departments of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the Toronto Western Hospital, University of Alberta and University of Toronto and was Associate Dean of Clinical Sciences, Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto. While he held many executive positions nationally and internationally, he will best be remembered as a dedicated and engaging teacher to a generation of medical students and residents. Bill will be deeply missed by his wife, Dr. Carol Cowell, and their son, Andrew."

Pawlowski, Joseph; University of Alberta, 1951. Died Nov. 17, 2006, aged 87.

Stewart, David Bradshaw; Killarney, Man.; University of Manitoba, 1941. Died Nov. 21, 2006. "Dr. Stewart was the founding professor of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at the University College of the West Indies (now University of the West Indies) in Jamaica, a post he held for 17 years. He played a pivotal role in creating this highly regarded medical school. He taught and inspired hundreds of medical students and guided many residents through their specialty training. At the age of 54 he gave up medicine and moved back to Manitoba, teaching in the Department of Zoology at Brandon University. To his surprise he eventually became the department chairman, then the vice-chair and treasurer of the Board of Governors. He played the viola and took pleasure in sharing a music stand with a grand-daughter in the University orchestra. Other passions included ornithology: he edited and had republished a seminal 19th century book on Jamaican birds."
